Bubble Blaster Invented a Super Soaker for 'Adults' (And It Sprays Champagne!)

by Christopher Osburn Feb 15th, 2019

Bubbly Blaster is selling water guns that don't shoot high-quality H2O, oh no, they're designed to shoot champagne. Obviously, the most fun part about opening a bottle of Champagne is spraying suds everywhere, right? Like winning the World Series without ever having to run. Well, now you can do so with better aim.

You can preorder the Rosé Gold Bubbly Blaster for a quick $99, The "adult" Super Soaker attaches to a bottle of your favorite champagne, turning it into a "long-lasting champers cannon." While we believe that wasting great champagne should be a punishable crime, we do love the idea of spraying things, in general, because that's what guys do.

Check out our choices for the best champagnes to drink, but if you're planning to spray them at people, maybe buy a cheap bottle for that and save the good stuff for yourself. And when they're lying, drenched, helpless on the ground, tell 'em Mandatory sent you.

Bollinger Special Cuvée

Bollinger is so baller that it's the favorite Champagne brand of James Bond. When 007 isn't drinking Martinis, he's sipping on Bollinger. This Pinot Noir-based champagne is complex, bold, and pairs perfectly with cheese and secret agent-type business. It definitely doesn't work well in a contraption designed to shoot Champagne.
